An Accurate Landfall.

I will briefly tell you of a single incident of seafaring life, to illustrate the almost absolute certainty with which navigators can calculate their position on the trackless can calculate their position on the trackless occan.

I sailed on a whaler from New Bedford on Nov. 23 bound for a South Atlantic cruise. We heat about the Guif Stream, to the leavard of the Bahamas, round about in the Caribbean Sea, and off the liver Plate. We saw land occasionally from the masthead and cade or twice from the deck.

Our cruise lasted until way in the following June. Then our water supply getting low, and there being faint indications of scurry in the forcessle. The old man bore up for Bermuda to take on water and onloiss.

We had see roland for three months, but the skipper laid our course, and on the evening of June 26 he took a lunar observation, after calculating which he said to the mate. "Keep on as you are till midnight then mate 'Keep on as you are lieave to."

This was done. At daylight, the island of Bermuda lay about three miles to leeward, exactly abeam to the entrance to St. George's Channel.

Was not that a good landfall after seven months cruising without making port?

Spurting Across the Gulf.

While I was one of the crew of the little chooner Mary Chilton, afterwards of tragic fame, we sailed one beautiful December morning from Nassau. N. P., for New York, fruit-laden. It was warm and a light breeze sett to spinning comfortably.

Rounding the Hole in the Wall we winged out for Hatteras. The breeze freshened, but it was a fair wind and we kept on. It grew stiffer, and by and by it was so strong that to attempt to swing in the boom would have endangered the mast.

I never saw a vessel fly as did that schooner. She plunged into the water enough to aimost bury the main hatch, but would rise every time only to leap again into the boiling surf.

Twenty-four hours we stood on, fearful at any moment comething would carry away and dismast us. Then the wind slackened and at midnight we sighted Hatteras light. It then took us fourteen days to nake Sandy Hook, battling against head winds and creening through fogs. But that sport across the Gulf Stream was an experience never to be forgotten.

We became absorbed in the sight of the porpoises, which began to approach the steamer with great commotion and at what segment to be a terrific rate of speed.

We began to speculate as to the probable cames of the trouble. We counted forty of these monsters of the deep as they neared us and to our niter astomishment we discovered that two signattic, man-eating sharks were closely oursaing them.

Just abreast of the vessel on the port side the porpoises suddenly stopped and the pursaing sharks rushed into the very middle of the school.

A terrible and bloody fight ensued. The calm sea was suddenly whitped into fury; foam and blood bespattered the bring waters.

Then the water became calm, and we saw the two sharks moving slowly away in a

We concluded at once that the two sharks in the terrible battle had bitten off and swallowed the heads of the forty porpoises.

WHERE'S LAWYER O'CONNOR?

His Bride Awaited Him in Vain and the Match is Off.

Lawver John H. O'Connor, who has offices in the new Mutual Life Building, in Nassau street, is greatly in request at Newark to-day and apparently shy of friends in New York.

Miss Minnie Gangwere was to have been married to Mr. O'Connor at 73 Park street. Newark, yesterday, having resigned her position as cierk in the public library with that view. They had been entaged for years.

Bride and trousseau were ready but the groom came not. Instead he sent a letter saying that the marriage could not take place. He volunteered no further information.

Miss Gangwere was prostrated by the news, and is still very ill.

An Evening Wonth reporter who called at Mr. O'Connor's office, 32 Nassau street, at 10 o'clock this morning, was calmly told that Mr. O'Connor had left there at 0 a. E. and would not be back until 5 r. M. His clerk professed not to know where be could be found.

have that necessary article for a child's life and happiness; they either had to have ten or fitteen dollars to spend for a have ten or litteen dollars to spend for a carriage or use a soap box with two wheels to roil their little ones out to get the necessary amount of fresh air to keep them alive. If mothers and others could only be taught the necessity of giving their children more fresh air they would have fewer undertakers' bills to pay. It is true that few mothers are not able to carry a child in their arms all day, but why should they do so when they can buy a Baby Carriage for $3.00, $4.00, $7.00, $8.00, $9.00, $10.00, $12.00, and up as high as $20,00, with irish Point Lace Parasoi Covers? It would make your heart glad to see the number of proud and happy mothers from all parts of New York, Brooking and Jersey City coming from John S. Collins's large establishment, 74 Broatway, Brooking, two blocks from Grand, Roosevelt and Twenty-third Street Ferries, where nearly one-halt of all the Baby Carriages sold in New York and Brooking are made. It is quite a common thing every fine morning to see from ten to twenty ladies coming over the ferries from Mr. Collins's. There is no merchant in New York or Brooklyn who has done so much for the innocent little sufferers. While Mr. Collins is a large manufacturer and wholesale dealer, he will sell one carriage at retail innocent little sunerers. While air, Col-lins is a large manufacturer and wholesale dealer, he will sell one carriage at retail at the same price he sells them in hundred lots, so if you want to get a good carriage cut this out and bring it to John S. Collins, 74 Broadway, Brooklyn, and you will save from $1.00 to $3.00.
